Aaron Morris is an associate in Reichman Jorgensen Lehman & Feldberg LLP's Silicon Valley office. His practice focuses on intellectual property litigation with an emphasis in patent litigation.

Aaron's experience includes defending and prosecuting district court litigations and IPRs, as well as coordinating pre-filing investigations for both accused infringers and patent owners.

A graduate of the University of Southern California Gould School of Law, Aaron was a member of the Southern California Law Review, as well as the Intellectual Property and Technology Law clinic, where he focused on assisting clients with copyright and trademark matters. Aaron also served as a judicial extern for Judge William Ryan of the Los Angeles Superior Court.

Prior to law school, Aaron was an engineer at Northrop Grumman, where he was responsible for designing and running tests of unmanned aircraft systems. He received his B.S. in aerospace engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he earned the Ronald E. McNair Award for academic achievement and contribution to the minority community.

Aaron is fluent in German.
