Joy Wang has nearly a decade of experience in intellectual property litigation. Focusing on patent matters in district courts and before the International Trade Commission, her technical background and former career as an engineer enable her to advise clients across various products and technologies, including pharmaceuticals, telecommunications, entertainment lighting, semiconductors, optoelectronic sensors, graphics cards, orthodontics, and orthopedic reconstruction, among others.

Joy has also prosecuted patents before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office—from drafting responses to office actions and appeal briefs to provisional and non-provisional applications.

Representative Matters

- Representing CardWare, Inc. in five patent litigations and related post-grant proceedings against Samsung Electronics in the Eastern District of Texas.
- Represented the GNOME Foundation pro bono in the Northern District of California in a lawsuit over patented image filtering and transmission technology brought by Rothschild Patent Imaging LLC (RPI). Obtained dismissal and a walk-away settlement in which RPI and its owner Leigh M. Rothschild granted a release and covenant protecting any software released under an Open Source Initiative-approved license from accusations of patent infringement, involving not only the asserted patent, but also the hundreds of other patents owned by Mr. Rothschild.
- Represented Price f(x), a SaaS pricing solution company, in multiple competitor litigations against Vendavo, Inc. in both the Northern District of California and Northern District of Illinois, involving claims of trade secret misappropriation, patent infringement, copyright infringement and unfair competition. Obtained dismissal and favorable settlement for Price f(x).
- Prepared amicus brief on behalf of public health organizations and professionals in support of the State of California in National Pork Producers Council v. Ross (U.S.), in which pork producers challenged the constitutionality of California Proposition 12, which bars the sale in California of pork products that the seller knows or should know came from the offspring of intensively confined sows.

A graduate of the University of California, Berkeley School of Law, Joy was a member of the Berkeley Technology Law Journal, the Ecology Law Quarterly, and the Asian Pacific American Law Students Association. She also received her B.S. from Berkeley in chemical engineering, where she was a member of the Regents' and Chancellors' Scholars Association.

Joy is also fluent in Mandarin.
